Overview

Cairin concentrates her practice on employment law and general litigation. She represents a wide variety of employers on a range of employment issues, including discrimination, retaliation, wrongful termination, whistleblower, wage and hour, breach of contract, as well as other statutory and common law claims under state and federal law. Cairin's goal is to advise and counsel in order to minimize litigation and ultimately zealously defending her clients. She also represents various parties in a wide range of disputes in state and federal court and through the mediation process as well as various licensed professionals in connection with Board complaints and other licensure-related proceedings.

Prior to joining Peabody & Arnold, Cairin gained experience across several insurance fields, including insurance defense, and subrogation. Additionally, Cairin has worked in several employment discrimination matters on the Plaintiff side.
