Overview

Rebecca is a trusted counselor, thoughtful problem solver, and passionate advocate for her clients. As a management-side employment lawyer, Rebecca has represented a number of employers and business owners for many years, as their businesses have grown and as they have adapted to changing business conditions. Rebecca counsels clients on all aspects of their relationships with employees and offers practical solutions to resolving workplace disputes. Her practice also includes working with clients to develop policies and practices to mitigate the risk of an employment practices claim, including offering compliance advice on the myriad of state and federal laws concerning the employment relationship, drafting employee handbooks and employment agreements, and conducting sexual harassment and other manager and employee training. Rebecca also serves as an outside independent investigator involving a variety of employee complaints, such as sexual harassment, hostile work environment and retaliation.

When employment disputes result in litigation, Rebecca efficiently, zealously, and effectively mounts a vigorous defense. She has defended clients in the full range of employment cases in state and federal courts and before administrative agencies including the MCAD and EEOC. She has represented employers in Title VII, ADEA, ADA, FLSA, FMLA and M.G.L. c. 151B cases as well as cases alleging common law claims such as defamation, wrongful termination, intentional interference with an advantageous business relationship, and breach of contract, including non-compete agreements.

Rebecca's litigation practice also includes defending a variety of professionals including psychiatrists, psychologists and social workers in licensing proceedings and in malpractice actions. In the early years of her practice, Rebecca was part of a national trial team and defended A.H. Robins Company statewide in cases involving the Dalkon Shield, an allegedly defective intrauterine device.
